This is a drill, this is a drill!

By JO2 Jd Walter, Task Force EXCEL Public Affairs Office

International Center for Emergency Response Training Academy, Ocala, Fla. – The temperature soars as two fire hose teams advance into a towering inferno. Black smoke curls into the afternoon sky, blotting out the sun. Underneath 70 pounds of Nomex, beads of sweat roll into the eyes of the Sailors, stinging as they struggle to subdue a 1,000-degree propane fire. This isn't your typical shipboard firefighter training. This is the International Center for Emergency Response Training Academy (ICERTA) in Ocala, Fla., and the Navy is in the house.

This course is part of the Chief of Naval Operations' initiative to revolutionize Navy training and education. At ICERTA, eight Sailors are earning not only professional firefighting certifications, but also college credits. This ensures that Sailors are not only employed, but employable.

"If it wasn't for this training I would have to start from scratch on the outside," said CWO3 Steve Greer, fire marshal of the USS Ronald Reagan, still under construction in Newport News, Va. A 25-year veteran of the Navy, and ICERTA pilot class leader, Greer sees the new opportunities being offered to Sailors as a key to the service's future success. "This translates into recruiting potential," said Greer. "The better training opportunities the Navy provides, the easier it will be to get younger people interested in serving."

The firefighting course, eight weeks of arduous schedules and intense heat, has met with nothing but accolades by the students. All coming from damage control backgrounds, the eight represent a cross section of Navy platforms, from Fleet training centers to pre-commissioning crews and aircraft carrier flight decks. Likewise, the class spans from the enlisted ranks of second-class petty officer to chief warrant officer. But for all their years of experience in the Navy, the ICERTA course is still teaching them new ways to go about the old business of fighting fires.

"There is a big difference between fighting fires aboard a ship and fighting a house fire," said HT1(SW) William Stevens, Fleet Training Command (FTC) Atlantic Fleet, Norfolk, Va. "If necessary you can leave a burning house and fight the fire from the outside. Aboard a ship, there is no leaving until the fire is out, and if we don't put it out, we don't go home, ever." Stevens, leading petty officer of FTC Atlantic's burn house, and volunteer firefighter in Hampton Roads, sees great benefits for the Navy damage control program in outside training. "Even though the techniques aren't always the same, this training provides a new way of thinking about fighting fires."

And a new way of thinking is exactly what the Revolution in Training is all about. The eight-week course began with the Sailors completing an DRILL Continued on Page 6

Vet pet care not a priority

By JO3 Jay Price

Managing Editor

Not understanding the Veterinary Clinic's mission? Frustrated with not being able to get your pet taken care of when you need it? Have questions about the rules? Well, the Vet Clinic has a few answers.

According to Andrea Bruno, the receptionist and Vet Tech assistant, the first priority of the Vet Clinic is not the care of servicemembers pets, nor is it the Army Capt. Jerrod Killian's first responsibility is to the quality of meat that is shipped into the Commissary, then he must be ready to take care of any Military Working Dog (MWD) that might need care. Then, when Killian has spare time, he can use it conducting surgeries and check ups for pets. Killian is the only surgeon at the facility.

Killian not only serves in Sigonella, but also is expected to be in Greece, Crete, South Africa, and La Maddalena at least twice a year, and can be TDY for up to two months at a time. Most times Killian goes TDY under advanced notice, but if a MWD from any of those countries needs his assistance, he can be gone by the next day, meaning servicemembers should be aware that they might have to go out on the economy to get their animals' surgery.

The Vet Clinic also has strict guidelines for seeing animals, be it for surgery or even just a check up / vaccination. All dogs, no matter their size must have a leash. All cats must be in a carrier, not only to keep them from running, but also to protect them from dogs that sense their presence. Finally, no children under the age of 12 may go into the Vet Clinic at all, even under adult supervision; the reason is because of the many different zoonotic diseases animals carry that children are susceptible to. All Vet care is by appointment only!

Currently Killian is not accepting any more surgery appointments, due to the fact that his surgery dates are full and that he is PCS'ing from NASSIG in July. A new Army Vet surgeon will arrive some-

If you have any questions or would like to make an appointment for a vaccination or other non-surgical need, call the Veterinary Clinic at 624-4258. They are available Monday through Friday, 8 a.m.to noon and 1 to 3 p.m.

NFL Hall of Famer pays visit to Sigonella

While visiting Sigonella, Howie Long was able to experience what many Sailors do on a daily basis. One task included serving lunch to the Sailors.

By JOSN Bridgette Bolt

Editor

Recently Sigonella received a visit from NFL and Fox Sport's Howie Long, former player for the Oakland Raiders. Sigonella was the only Navy base in Europe to have the privilege of meeting Long.

"The best part of coming out to a military facility is meeting the people. I've always taught my three boys that the military, police and firefighters are the real heroes in life, it's just unfortunate that it took September 11 for some people to realize that," said Long.

Long's day was a long one, so to speak! Starting at the wee hour of 6 a.m, Long was there to cheer the Supply Department on at their PRT. After much yelling and pep talking the troops for a run, it was on to HC 4 and VP 10 for some aviation education. Here Long was given a flight suit and cap as well as command coins and a lot of handshakes.

Deciding he would like to pay a few unexpected visits, Long left it up to the local Sigonella staff to point him in any direction; commands that received this rare treat were Explosive Ordinance Disposal Unit, Crash-Fire-Rescue and Air Traffic Control. Long did everything from calling a sick Master Chief at home to wish him a quick recovery, to saying hello to all the flight line from the main radio in the Air Traffic Control tower.

It was now time for lunch. Making sure the NFL Hall of Famer was good and hungry the staff at NAS II galley directed Long behind the counter and allowed him to serve a few Sailors their food.

Passing the galley back to the regular staff, Long was off to Jox sports bar for a two hour autographing session where he signed various items for the Sigonella community.

Finding time in his day for a little charity, Long paid a visit to the commissary to bag a few groceries, donating all of his tips to Stephen Decatur's Scholarship fund.

"What's your business here and give me your ID" were the next words out of Long's mouth as he checked vehicles entering NAS I gate alongside Sigonella's patrolmen.

With a schedule as diverse as this, many Sailors were able to meet Long, and he was able to see first hand what many do on a daily basis. "I'm thrilled to be here and want all of you guys to know what a great job you're all

This year's celebration banquet was held on NAS I. During the celebration, performers danced, gave speeches, displayed many different fashions, and even had a martial arts display.

BBQ safety

By Stephen Vitek, contributing writer

Station BEQ and BOQ occupants are reminded that charcoal barbecue cooking within rooms or on barracks balconies is unauthorized. Cooking facilities are provided on the grounds around the barracks. Not only is there a fire hazard associated with balcony cooking, the smoke generated often ascends to other levels and can penetrate other rooms affecting air quality and smoke detector sensitivity. Hibachi's are another popular item. Many people think that because of their small size, that it's all right to use them outside barracks rooms. The following are requirements from the Station Fire regulations concerning barbeque cooking at the barracks.

-At least 15 feet away from the building

-Not under low lying branches, canopies, cabanas or similar combustible material.

-Away from air-conditioning intakes.

-Started with proper ignition fluid. -Coals disposed of once cooled to metal receptacles with lids. Do not discard charcoal to dumpsters until the following day.

NASSIG supports Palermo air rescue expo

The Air Rescue Expo 2002 in Palermo, is the first ever exposition in Sicily where they demonstrated to the public how they perform air rescues with their planes, jets and helicopters. While planes and jets were making visual contact for rescue procedures, the helicopters were doing many maneuvers to pick up people or drop water. Sigonella's Crash, Fire, Rescue team was there to show support. The plane above gathered water from the sea, dropping it on a demo fire to show how they are used to fight fires in hard to reach areas. The next Air Rescue Expo in Sicily will not take place until 2004.

Capt. Tim Davison, NASSIG Commanding Officer

Today is a great day here at NAS Sigonella. Our brand new Navy Exchange and Defense Commissary Shopping Complex on NAS I is now open and fully operational. This eagerly awaited recapitalization project is just one of the many ongoing quality of life initiatives here at NASSIG designed to improve our growing community. As we get further along with our Sig Improvement Plan, you will notice more and more construction, and in some areas, destruction to make room for the numerous other facilities scheduled to go up over the next few years. Please continue to bear with us as we move offices and people around. Your patience and consideration thus far has been tremendous and together we can make Sigonella the best Navy base in the Med.

Another way we are working to improve Sigonella is along the lines of communication. We continue to work with the TELECOM representatives to develop the best Internet service and access for our community both on and off base. This is a challenging task due to certain infrastructure limitations and inherent differences between U.S. and European specifications, but understand, we are working on it. Some things just take more time than others.

Also, if you haven't noticed already, our own websites are improving thanks to the community. Departments, tenants commands and various organizations have really "turned to" and submitted their web inputs, so we no longer have all those "under construction" pages. Our website is our "first impression" for many newly reporting or interested personnel and their families to discover information about Sigonella. We owe it to ourselves to highlight our achievements, our abilities and our community as much as we owe those outside the command. Both the internal and external command websites are an ongoing process improvement project and must adhere to DOD web policy in terms of compliance and security. Web pages do require time, management and most importantly clear and concise information. Our ITD expert, Mr. Saverio Bruno as well as a number of other personnel are here to assist anyone building a page or to answer questions regarding websites. They have done a terrific job with the inputs they have received so far and are always looking for more. I encourage everyone who hasn't submitted their web page inputs to do so as soon as possible because we want the first impression a visitor receives from Sigonella to be the best impression whether it is online or in person.

Before Anesthesia: your active role makes a difference

By Lt. Kenneth Spence, Cmdr. Carol Remey and Lt. Tom Taghon, NAVHOSP

What is Anesthesia?

Anesthesia is freedom from pain. Each year, more than 26 million people in the United States undergo some form of medical treatment requiring anesthesia. Anesthesia, in the hands of qualified professionals like Anesthesiologists and Certified Registered Nurse Anesthetists, is a safe and effective means of alleviating pain during nearly every type of medical procedure. Anesthesia care is not confined to surgery alone. The process also refers to activities that take place both before and after an anesthetic is given.

There are three basic types of aneshesia:

General anesthesia produces a loss of sensation throughout the entire body.

Regional anesthesia produces a loss of sensation to a specific region of the body.

Local anesthesia produces a loss of sensation to a small specific area of the body.

Anesthesia is a major part of your surgery.

During the procedure, anesthesia allows you to be free of pain. All anesthesia care is provided with the highest degree of professionalism, including constant monitoring of every important body function. As changes occur in your reactions to anesthesia, the anesthesia provider responds with modifications of the anesthetic to ensure your safety and comfort. In addition to their role in the procedure itself, the anesthesia provider makes many preparations for you before and after surgery. You can, and should take an active role in these preparations by communicating and cooperating with your anesthesia provider and your surgeon. There are several kinds of anesthesia.

The one chosen for you is based on factors such as your physical condition, the nature of the surgery, and your reactions to medications. Frank and open discussion with your anesthesia provider is key in the selection of the best anesthetic for you.

In particular, you must speak freely and follow instructions closely regarding your intake of food, or beverages before anesthesia. It is important to inform your anesthesia provider of all medications you are taking, including over the counter and herbal medicines. Such substances can react negatively with anesthesia

The preoperative interview is essential to effective communication.

This confidential discussion with the anesthesia provider prior to surgery provides information vital to your care. To help you prepare for the interview, the nursing staff in the preoperative clinic at Naval Hospital Sigonella will have a questionnaire for you to fill out. Information supplied by the questionnaire assists your anesthesia provider in doing the interview thoroughly and efficiently.

Different types of patients or procedures may require different types of anesthesia.

Pregnant patients should prepare before the onset of labor for the possibility of having an anesthetic, even if a natural childbirth is planned. During pregnancy, keep accurate records of allergies, high blood pressure, prescriptions, and over-the-counter medications. The use of drugs, including recreational drugs and alcohol, can increase the risk of anesthetic complications for both mother and baby.

Older adults go through complex physical changes while aging, which may affect their bodies' response to anesthesia. You or your family can assist the anesthesia provider by providing a detailed list of all medications, including aspirin, taken regularly.

Patients with hereditary disorders such as diabetes and sickle cell anemia, need special attention. These conditions can be managed properly if the anesthesia provider knows about them before a procedure.

Children should be specially prepared for anesthesia, and for surgery in general. Allow them to bring favorite toys along for their stay. Make frequent reference to things children will enjoy after the procedure. If possible, take children on a hospital tour and let them talk with hospital personnel, particularly the anesthesia provider.

Ambulatory care allows you to go home the same day as your surgery or early the next day. It is important, however, to provide the same accurate information during the preoperative interview. In addition, preparations should be made before ambulatory surgery for another adult to accompany you to the health care facility, drive you home, and monitor your recovery.

Remember:

Speak frankly. Ask questions. Follow instructions. Provide your anesthesia provider with an accurate medical history. And, notify your anesthesia provider or doctor immediately of any change in your physical condition prior to surgery. Communication and cooperation are essential to the anesthesia process.

1/2 cup peanut oil 12 flour tortillas

3 cups shredded cooked chicken

1 pound Monterey jack grated cheese

1/4 cup heavy cream

1/2 cup finely chopped scallions Salt

1-1/2 cups chopped Mexican green

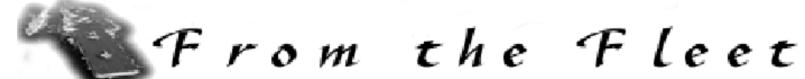

1 cup chopped cilantro

tomatoes or canned tomatillos verdes drained and chopped

4-ounce can peeled green chilies, drained and chopped

1-1/2 cups sour cream

Heat oil in skillet. Put each tortilla into the hot oil for a few seconds turning it over so it softens. Stack tortillas in a pan. Preheat oven to 325 degrees, oil a baking sheet about  $14 \times 9 \times 2$ . Put some chicken, cheese, one teaspoon of cream, a sprinkling of scallions and salt to taste down the center of each tortilla. Roll them loosely and set side by side in the baking dish with ends overlapping. Cover the dish snugly with foil and bake 30 minutes until the cheese melts and bubbles a little. Meanwhile, prepare the sauce. Finely chop the tomatoes, cilantro and green chilies. These can be run through a food processor very briefly so that the texture is in chunks instead of pureed. Stir in sour cream until well blended. Remove the enchiladas from the oven, spoon a little of the green sauce over the top and pass the rest of sauce in a bowl.

Selective Reenlistment Bonus program update

Chief of Naval Personnel Public Affairs Office

WASHINGTON – With Sailors choosing to Stay Navy at record levels Navy leadership has taken a hard look at Selective Reenlistment Bonuses (SRB). To provide bonuses to Sailors at a critical point in their careers and those who are forward-deployed serving in combat zones, SRB requests have been prioritized.

SRBs have contributed to the outstanding retention rate. For those with less than six years of service, Zone A, retention rate is at 65.8 percent, nearly nine percentage points above the Navy's goal. Retention rates for all zones are well above Navy goals.

"The Navy values the service of every Sailor who decides to Stay Navy. The reenlistment numbers have been truly impressive, reflecting a sense of mission and leadership involvement throughout the Fleet," said Chief of Naval Personnel, Vice Adm. Norb Ryan Jr.

With over 15,000 Sailors receiving SRBs, this year's $186 million budget for SRBs has been expended at a higher rate than expected, making it necessary to adjust how SRBs are awarded.

Helping Navy leadership shape manning in critical skill areas, SRBs are a financial incentive for these Sailors to reenlist.

After the SRB program revised rates in March approximately 4,800 Sailors applied for SRBs during the transition period in April and early May, making this one of the largest SRB months ever.

"The SRB take rate has been super. To ensure we have enough money to sustain the program through the remainder of the fiscal year, we've had to take the step of prioritizing who receives SRBs through September," said Ryan. Priority consideration for remaining SRB requests will be given in the following order:

-Sailors who will pass through SRB zone of eligibility before the end of FY-02.

-Sailors who are under orders to obligate service and orders must be executed in FY-02.

-Sailor's whose end of active obligated service (EAOS) is in FY-02 with no extension time remaining on contract (reached 48-month maximum extension time).

-Sailors with requests to reenlist and are departing a tax-free zone in FY-02.

-Sailors with an inoperative extension with an EAOS in FY-02.

-All other Sailors requesting SRB reenlistment. Those whose FY-02 reenlistment requests cannot be supported based on these priorities will automatically be given an extension and a reenlistment date in the first 45 days of FY-03.

The intent is to approve eligible SRB reenlistment requests for September 2002 or the first 45 days of FY-03 at an amount not less than Sailors would have received if they had reenlisted at EAOS in FY-02.

Long, tough war ahead, Bush says

By Linda D. Kozaryn American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The United States is in the midst of a war against a determined and fierce enemy, President Bush said recently at the White House.

"Had I known that the enemy was going to use airplanes to kill on that fateful (Sept. 11) morning, I would have done everything in my power to protect the American people," the president told Air Force Academy cadets and other guests gathered on the South Lawn.

During a ceremony to present the Commander in Chief's Trophy to the Air Force Academy Falcons football team, Bush responded to reports that he'd received advance warning of a possible terrorist attack. "Second-guessing," he noted, seems to have become "second nature" in the nation's capital.

The president said he wanted the troops to know that he takes his job as commander in chief seriously and that his most important job is to protect the American homeland.

"I'll do whatever it takes — and I know you'll join me in doing whatever it takes — to prevent the enemy from attacking America again like they did and causing thousands to suffer and to mourn and to grieve," he vowed. "We will use the might of America to protect the American people."

The nation is in for a long struggle, Bush said. "This is a tough war. This is an enemy that's not going to quit." The enemy thought America's people would "just roll over," or "file a couple of lawsuits."

"They found out we think differently here in America," the president said. "We think differently because this is a nation that loves our freedom, loves our country. And this is a nation that has got citizens who are willing to sacrifice for a cause greater than themselves."

In order to protect innocent lives, Bush said, "this country must have the will and the determination to chase these killers down one by one and bring them to justice. And that's exactly what's going to happen, so long as I am president of the United States of America."

Bush pointed out that the trophy ceremony was being held to honor the Air Force Academy football team. "We're also here to honor (service members)," he said on the eve of Armed Forces Day, "... the men and women who wear our uniform and who are willing to sacrifice for the greatest nation on the face of the earth." Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice responded a day earlier to the same reports as the president.

"It's grossly inaccurate to suggest that the president had any kind of a warning about Sept. 11," Rumsfeld said during a telephone interview with Rush Limbaugh. "In my view, all appropriate actions were taken according to the threat situation as far as it was known.

"It's really much ado about nothing," the secretary said.

"To my knowledge there was no warning, no alert as to suicide attackers in airplanes. There've always been concerns about hijacking. That's been true for months and years as a possibility."

Throughout the spring and summer, he noted, U.S. officials received numerous threat reports, but "without any specificity as to what might happen." At times, he said, the State Department sent out cautions and warnings to their embassies, and the Defense Department had set different threat levels for various areas around the world.

Threats come in many varieties, Rice said at a White House news briefing. "Very often we have uncorroborated information; sometimes we have corroborated but very general information," she said. "But I can tell you that it is almost never the case that we have information that is specific as to time, place or method of attack."

After providing a chronology of threat reports received during the spring and summer, she concluded that the bulk of the evidence indicated an attack was likely to take place overseas. As a result, the State Department and the Defense Department were on very high states of alert.

"The embassies have very clear protocols on how to button up; so does the military. That was done," she said. "But at home, while there was much less reporting or chatter at home, people were thinking about the U.S., and the FBI was involved in a number of investigations of potential al Qaeda personnel operating in the United States."

On Aug. 6, 2001, Rice said, the president received a daily briefing, which was "an analytic report," not "a warning briefing." The report talked about Osama bin Laden's methods of operation and his activities in 1997 and 1998.

The briefing mentioned hijacking," she said, "but hijacking in the traditional sense." According to the report, the most likely scenario involved terrorists taking over an airliner, holding passengers and demanding the release of one of their operatives.

"I want to reiterate, it was not a warning," Rice stressed. "There was no specific time, place or method mentioned."

The report talked about "a potential hijacking as a method that al Qaeda might employ, but no specific information saying that they were planning such an attack at a particular time.

"I don't think anybody could have predicted that these people would take an airplane and slam it into the World Trade Center, take another one and slam it into the Pentagon; that they would try to use a hijacked airplane as a missile," Rice concluded.

Training department receives a face lift By JOSN Bridgette Bolt

Editor

Sigonella now has a department dedicated to the training and mission of the Sailor. Once a division of Operations, the Education and Training Department (ETD) is now an individual department, with the sole mission of bettering Sigonella's Sailors.

Lt. j.g. Bill Lewis is not only the department head of ETD, but is also the appointed ESO of Sigonella. A few of his objectives with this job will be, "helping Sailors put together packages for desired career moves and acting as a liaison between civilian colleges and the Navy," says Lewis.

The Navy and ETD are looking to move with the times by seeking training for Sailors from the best venues possible. "One way would be bringing in civilian teams that specialize in training such as a company called Covey, one of the highest sought-after training companies for civilian corporations. They will be here conducting some training in July," said Lewis.

The main goals of ETD is consolidating all training under one roof, that way the Sailor always knows where to turn. "We want the best training possible, and the best environment to receive that training. Before, we only had two classrooms, we now have six, which have all received a recent face-lift," said Lewis.

Consolidated training, new technology, quality facilitators, new classrooms, online tracking and brand new computers are just a few of the improvements that ETD is now making for the Sailors here. You can be sure the improvements won't stop there. If your division would like information about ETD or you have questions on training, please call 624-9201.

Threat warnings are just the truth

By Linda D. Kozaryn American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON – Over the last few days, Vice President Dick Cheney, FBI Director Robert Mueller, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and New York City authorities have warned that terrorists will most likely strike again.

"What's going on? Are all these things part of a pattern?" Jim Lehrer asked Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld recently on the PBS program NewsHour:

"There is no pattern," Rumsfeld replied. "It's just the truth."

The truth, the defense secretary stressed, is that there are hundreds of trained terrorists around the world. "They have money," he said. "They are skillful at what they do, as we saw on Sept. 11."

For months, Rumsfeld said, he's been warning Americans that such countries as Iraq, Iran, Syria, Libya and North Korea sponsor terrorism and that these nations have chemical and biological weapons programs. Some of them also have aggressive programs to develop nuclear weapons.

These countries have close relationships with al Qaeda, Hezbollah and other terrorist networks, and the terrorists want to acquire weapons of mass destruction, he said. Based on what the world witnessed on Sept. 11, "they wouldn't hesitate a second to use weapons of mass destruction, if they had them."

"That's the world we live in," Rumsfeld said. "The proliferation of these weapons is so widespread that we have to expect that that will be the case."

Even though the defense secretary and other security officials have said there is no perfect defense against terrorism, much is being done to protect America, according to Rumsfeld. U.S. officials have been working aggressively to reduce proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and the capabilities to deliver them. They are also working to heighten public awareness of the threats and strengthen intelligence gathering.

Since it's not possible to defend at every time in every place against every conceivable technique, Rumsfeld said, the United States is taking the offensive. President Bush wants to go after global terrorists around the world and the countries that serve as sanctuaries and havens.

"We went into Afghanistan ... and we have thrown the Taliban government out and we've got the al Qaeda on the run," Rumsfeld said. "We have to stay at it now and see that Afghanistan does not revert back to a terrorist haven."

U.S. leaders are also using other means to put pressure on the terrorists, he said. U.S. efforts are working to dry up terrorists' financial support, to cut terrorist recruiting and to make it more difficult for them to move between countries. "It seems to me that we've got a full court press on terrorists around the world," Rumsfeld said.

But that still doesn't mean you can stop every attack, the defense secretary noted. The threat of asymmetrical attacks is a reality, which makes it important for the nation to transform the military. The armed forces must be "arranged for the kinds of threats and capabilities that can be used against us in the coming decade or two," he concluded.

American children raise $4 million for Afghan children

By Linda D. Kozaryn American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON, – American children are sending more than $4 million to help pay for food, shelter, clothing, health care and toys for Afghan children, first lady Laura Bush said today.

Children responded "eagerly" when her husband asked each boy and girl in America to raise or earn a dollar to help the Afghan children, Bush said during an address to the Afghan people on Radio Free Europe.

"The children of my country are especially concerned for the children of yours," she said. "Although you live half a world away, American children are learning about you in their schools and in their homes."

When the envelopes came in, Bush noted, they contained more than money. She shared a few of what she called messages of hope with her Afghan audience.

A girl named Grace wrote: "I'm sending a dollar to help the innocent children of Afghanistan ... I wish to help one life of a child."

Giovanni, a 10-year-old, wrote: "I earned this dollar from my teacher by cleaning our class. I hope that this will help the children and give them what they need to survive."

One letter said: "Dear children of Afghanistan, we care about you. We want you to have food, clothes, water and medicine. Sincerely, Gary Coppernell, a U.S.A. kid."

Another child wrote: "I hope every dollar we send will help the children of Afghanistan grow up to be healthy and live a good life."

"These are the voices of America," the first lady added. "All of us want all the citizens of Afghanistan to be healthy and to live a good life."

Italian kindergarteners and teachers from the Istituto Comprensivo in Motta S. Anastasia recently paired with Stephen Decatur School first graders and teachers through a remarkable twinning program that lasted a week. This exchange was a great opportunity to strengthen community relations between the Italian and the American Community.

SDS first graders team up with Motta kindergarteners

As La Sicilia reported, the Istituto Comprensivo, a school from Motta S. Anastasia was recently paired with DoDDS Stephen Decatur School through a remarkable twinning program that lasted a week.

Maria Grazia Accordino, a Motta teacher who is also the president of Motta Tourist Office promoted the project.

"It's been several years that I have been committed in developing cultural exchange programs between Motta and Sigonella. This last project was specifically aimed at developing children's awareness and appreciation of different cultures as well as improving relations and exchange experience between American and Italian kids. Last year, the Motta Istituto Comprensivo produced an Italian-English school newspaper focused on the Sicilian traditions that was exchanged with the SDS newspaper," Accordino said.

Motta mayor Giovanni Tinnirello, Salvatore Saporito, the Cultural Councilor, councilman Antonio Marino, and Salvatore Scuderi, Deputy President of City Council welcomed the American pupils and teachers at the Motta park.

"It was a great opportunity to strengthen our community relations with the American Community," Tinnirello said.

Motta Istituto Comprensivo teachers, Maria Grazia Accordino, Grazia Tornabene, Angela Sgroi, Rosa Pezzino, Maria Pappalardo, Barbara Motta, Alida Brazzaventre, Lucia Consoli and Tatiana Mazzaglia worked with SDS teachers Theresa Zak, Dana Dufka, Eleanor Stoll, Sharon Lakin, and Francesca Di Bella, the elementary host nation teacher, to organize the twinning.

Agata Di Dio, an Italian teacher and a member of the Motta Tourist Office, acted as a translator.

"It was wonderful to be able to breakthrough the language barrier and to communicate using other forms than the language. Our students were happy to share their classroom with the Italian kids and to make new friends. They still talk about their new Italian friends. This will nurture the relationships with our host nation," said Dufka,

During the first part of the intercultural project that took place on May 15, the Motta students spent a day in Sigonella visiting Stephen Decatur School and participating in class activities, games and enjoyed a party held in their honor.

On May 17, SDS students visited Motta where they received a warm welcome at the local city park.

Students sang the American and Italian national anthems with feeling and emotion. Italian students also sang traditional songs in English to present Sicily and show hospitality to their American guests.

At the park, SDS students also saw the plant that they adopted about a month ago. Later, all students participated in several sports and game activities. The mothers of the Italian students offered a tasty lunch to the American guests at the end of the visit.

This project was also aimed at establishing long-term links with Stephen Decatur School in order to broaden the language experience for the participating pupils.

Caltagirone celebrates Religious Festival

On May 31, a religious festival in honor of the Madonna Conadomini will be held in the historic heart of the town. The Conadomini Virgin Mary being venerated in town is depicted in a 15th century painting preserved in the Chiesa di Santa Maria del Monte, a beautiful church sitting atop the famous 142 steps of Santa Maria del Monte. The magnificent 17th century Scala (steps) that currently features elegant flower decorations celebrating the Madonna is a perfect backdrop for this heartfelt religious event.

The parade held in the afternoon featuring farm tractors and floats decorated with the "Rusedda," (a local plant) and holy pictures is the highlight of the festival. It leaves at 4 p.m. from viale Mario Milazzo in the southern part of Caltagirone and arrives in piazza Matrice (atop the steps) at 8:30 p.m.

Rusedda is a perfumed plant growing in the neighboring Bosco (wood) of San Pietro that used to be sold by the Caltagirone farmers to the craftsmen who made household crockery (who used to fuel the oven in their workshops) to gather funds for the local church.

After the parade, the festival ends with firework and music shows.

Once you are in Caltagirone, plan a visit to the mesmerizing Villa Patti, an elegant residence also featuring beautiful gardens built in 1830 that was recently restored. The villa, which is located in via Santa Maria di Gesù, houses through Sept. 30 an exhibition on the 18th century aristocratic Baroque villas in Sicily. Period furnishings, photos, ceramics, manuscripts and paintings dating back to the 19th century are displayed in a unique and elegant environment. Open Tuesday through Sunday from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.; Tuesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday also open in the afternoon from 4 to 7 p.m. Closed on Mondays. Admission is free.

They did what? Holy Cow!

(Bangladesh) Six highway robbers, who had apparently watched too many gangster movies, were caught in their own trap when they blocked a bypass with their car at midnight. The driver of an oncoming truck carrying a cargo of cows was unable to halt his heavy vehicle in time. The truck rolled right through the blockade, crushing the car and its scheming occupants. Five robbers died, and the sixth was critically wounded. A cow was also killed in the accident.

Off the Rack! Black Knight

Black Knight is a movie very similar to "A Kid in King Arthur's Court," or the recent French version, "Just Visiting." In this movie, Martin Lawrence is Jamal, a goofy, non-impressive Janitor who works for a Medieval Renaissance Fair that is about to run out of business. While his mouth gets him moat cleanup duty, he falls in, finding himself in a different world, and I don't mean sea world.

Magically transported to medieval times, where Jamal thinks he's just entered a new and more exotic fair, he doesn't understand that his acts are absurd and mind-boggling. When he finally understands where he is, he becomes involved in a group who is fermenting a revolution against the king.

While the idea of the movie is not as original as many of the others on the rack, it was fun and entertaining. In one of the best scenes Jamal teaches court musicians how to play Sly Stone's "Dance to the Music" on instruments more properly used for elevator music.

Sooner than later, the comedy starts to thin, as Jamal turns from a jester to a hero, taking the role a little more serious. Rated PG-13 for a bit of adult humor, I would still think it suitable for children as it visually entertains and stays mostly clean. I rate this film three stars.

intensive Firefighting I and II section, the initial course required of all new civilian firefighters, which included practical application on vehicle, structure and gas fires. Students also completed training in rappelling, search and rescue, and ladder handling. The course is a merging of several different program components by ICERTA, specifically for the Navy.

"This is the first time we ran a course like this. This was intensive," said Tom Kennedy, ICERTA's technical services coordinator. Kennedy acknowledged some of the limitations of the course, like the lack of shipboard scenarios, but sees great potential for future training. "We have an opportunity to create a program of training based on the Navy's needs, specifically shipboard firefighting applications, that takes the best of both these worlds."

Seeking out training and educational solutions from the civilian sector is a primary focus of the Revolution in Training. Taking the best industry has to offer and adapting it to Navy needs provides Sailors with proven and respected training certifications and professional credentials, while creating a more efficient and effective training program for the Navy.

"The opportunity to send our Sailors to ICERTA is just a first step in the process of developing a program that better suits our Sailors and better meets the needs of the Navy," said Rear Adm. Harry Ulrich, director of Task Force for Excellence through Commitment to Education and Training (EXCEL), the implementation arm of the revolution. "The process requires the Navy to analyze the content of this training, consider the evaluations of the eight Sailors that attended the course, and review the proficiency requirements for Navy firefighters to see how they are being met by this training."

Upon completion of the course, each Sailor will receive International Fire Service Certification and Accreditation Commission (IFSAC) certifications in Fire Fighter I and II, Hazardous Materials Awareness and Operations, Fire Instructor I, and Fire Officer I and II. The certifications will be issued through the Missouri State Fire Marshall's office. Additionally, each will be awarded eight credits from the University of Missouri, which can be applied to a degree in the field of fire science.

NCTS Sailor gets published

By CWO2 Alex Pena

Contributing writer Having writer's block can be tough when you are under-the-gun to write an article. The tougher part is actually getting your article published. ET3 Charly

L. Williams doesn't appear to have these obstacles. During the past eight months Williams has entered in two separate contests and won first prize in her first and was published during her second. Winning an essay contest and getting published on the second is quite an achievement for anyone.

Williams entered her first essay contest with University of Maryland under the category of "New Student." The prize was $500 in paid tuition and fees. Her essay, "Why do I wish to continue my education and why do I wish to continue with UMUC," was a two-part essay that quickly won the prize. Since then, she has been able to fully utilize her winnings by paying for her college education.

In November Williams read about an essay contest for the Naval Institute's Annual Enlisted essay contest. "I had already won one contest so I thought I might as well try for another," she said. Her essay, A Medal for Not Getting into Trouble, was soon submitted. About three months later her answer to the contest arrived. The Naval Institute said that her essay was good enough for printing in their monthly magazine Proceedings. For $75 and her approval, her article would be published. She accepted the reward and gave her approval to print the article.

Williams' article provides the reader with a historical, as well as a personal viewpoint, of the Navy's Good Conduct Medal and ways to possibly improve upon it. Her essay can be found in the March 2002 issue of Proceedings.
